Surrey Care Trust chairman Dick Jewkes, Esther Hayes of Digital Steps, Fiona McAllister of Mundays, Trust Chief Executive Elaine, Michael Kirtley of Morrisons, and Karen Steele of Mustang Engineering.

When Surrey lawyers Mundays held a special lunch at its Cobham offices recently it wasn't to talk business, it was to put the spotlight on people who are the least likely to be calling on their services.

The lunch was to raise awareness of the work of the Surrey Care Trust, providing second chance education and other support for people who are marginalised by disadvantage and lack of opportunity or who need a second chance.

Lunch guests included both companies who already support the charity and those for whom this occasion was an introduction to its work.

"The Surrey Care Trust is working for just those people we probably don't serve," said Mundays partner Fiona McAllister, who ran the London marathon in 2007 for the charity. "We like to support the Trust to give back to the Surrey community and we feel the charity is meeting a need which is perhaps not widely appreciated."

As Elaine Tisdall, Chief Executive of the Surrey Care Trust, explained: "Surrey is a beautiful and prosperous county yet side by side with some of the most prosperous neighbourhoods in the UK there are pockets of serious deprivation and social problems. That is where you will find us at work."
